A novel by Ron Tell. During the Vietnam conflict the U.S.

government did not always admit to the fact that there were ground forces operating in North Vietnam, Laos, or Cambodia, but there were. This is the story, as told by the survivors, of a special detachment of the United States Air Force Security Service that operated in all three countries. Formed shortly after the Tet Offensive this secret group's purpose was to support the offensive air operations of U.S. forces during the bombings in North Vietnam and to assist in the interdiction of supplies and personnel along the Ho Chi Minh Trail. They became the frail human element of a complex system of equipment that pointed the finger to the location of the targets for aerial bombing.
