Facing the tall, brooding rider by the stormy lakeshore, Lady Faye Rivellaux clings to her goal—to rescue the kidnapped child she vowed to protect.

At all costs, she must win back the little girl she loves as her own.

When the stranger demands a ransom she can never pay, Faye offers him instead her one last hope—a gold cup. Brant Meslarches is stunned to see the chalice. Worth a fortune, it's proof a lost cache of wealth from the legendary Celtic King Arthur does exist, as Brant's murdered brother believed. Brant can't return the little girl to the lady whose desperate beauty captivates him. Yet, now that he's seen Lady Faye, he can't let her escape his grasp; she is the key to his only means of redemption. The last thing Faye wants is an alliance with a scarred knight tormented by secrets.

But, she has no other way to rescue the child.

Risking all, she joins Brant's quest. And finds some things are more valuable than gold.
