As the series continues, Derrick is still trying to adapt to life in the islands. One again he is reminded that life isn't simple. Not even in paradise. His hopes for a clean break from the past are shattered. And he is slipping into new tangled webs of quests for power, control and deceit. His goddaughters are with him as he tries to set aside time just for them. However, on the very first morning of his second attempt at a vacation with them, his ex-wife shows up to take his goddaughters away. He is on very thin ice with his ex as he gets her to agree to let them stay. Under certain conditions. Things seem to be going better until they take off for a day at the beach.

While getting a surfing on from his partner Pele and her sister, they all witness an explosive boating accident. Or was it? While they dig deeper into the events surrounding the incident, they uncover a murder in California, and a document called the Blue Line Report. As their list of suspects grows, they also discover a tie to Tomas Kobayashi. The brother of Pele and her sister. To make things worse, as he tries to restore some balance to his life and work, he finds disturbing clues that the veterinarian he has been dating may not be who he thought she was. And he thought moving to paradise would be like living in paradise. How naive.
